

THE COMET.

VOL. I.

JOHNSON CITY, TENN., SATURDAY, APRIL 26, 1884.

NO. 7.

Politeness has no creed.

Every bidder has a top round to it.

Pere Hyacinthe is lecturing in San Francisco.

Dickens used to be fond of singing funny songs to children.

Miss Nellie Grant Sartoris will spend the summer at Newport.

Queen Margherita, of Italy, is said to be growing handsomer.

Our characters we make, our reputations are often made for us.

Mrs. Langtry now combs her hair to the top of her shapely head.

President Arthur has never played a game of cards in the White House.

Mrs. David Davis uses her husband's old white vests for window awnings.

It is no disgrace to be bit by a dog the first time, but the second time it is.

Very intelligent people carry a large share of their brains in their faces.

One of the strongest evidences to me of a hereafter is that we cannot prove it.

About half we know, we guess at, and the other half, somebody has guessed at for us.

A man of a great deal of character cannot hide it. He will betray it even when he sneezes.

These are the mornings when the roses kiss the girls on the cheeks and forget to go away.

It is the strongest possible argument for our immortality that nine of every ten human beings believe it.

The test of the Keely motor, which was fixed for one day last week, was again postponed.

The Delaware peach crop is said to have escaped injury from the recent inclement weather.

There were 195 business failures in the United States last week, against 153 for the corresponding week last year.

The New York Legislature has passed the Bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and butterine.

The preparation for the departure of the Greely search expedition are being hurried forward at the Brooklyn Navy Yard.

April returns of winter wheat and rye show a largely increased area planted, and a better average in condition than in 1883.

The Queen of Tahiti, while visiting lately a Paris institution for deaf mutes said that in her island the infirmity was unknown.

A drug journal gives a correspondent two formulas for "butter colors." They contain annatto, turmeric, saffron, caustic potash, borax, and alcohol.

The House Committee on the Judiciary has adopted a report against the proposition for a woman suffrage amendment to the Constitution.

The majority of the House Committee on Public Lands have adopted a report declaring the unearned portion of the Northern Pacific land grant forfeited.

A mineral exhibit, marked "unknown," at the Boston exhibition last fall, is said to have led to the discovery of the reported valuable tin deposits in North Carolina.

Mr. Conkling has not the slightest sense of humor. He would not know a "petrified Joe Miller" joke from a revised version of "Jeremiah's Lamentations."

The Lancet feels a sort of righteous indignation at the necessity of informing a correspondent that "the notion of suicide of animals below man is absurd and unphysiological."

There are but fourteen American exhibitors at the Calcutta World's Fair, and six of these are manufacturers of patent medicines and three manufacturers of sewing machines.

Thousands of pounds of dynamite are carted through the streets of Chicago every day. The man in charge of the factory says the stuff is not so dangerous as ordinary gunpowder.

The difference between the Ohio and the Mississippi mob is this, in Cincinnati they try to lynch the murderer, and in Copiah county they lynch the victim.

The Cincinnati mob that started out to hang somebody, must be paper hangers; they're so long getting at the job and do so much mischief getting ready for it.

Governor Crittenden is awfully ashamed of it, and now comes out and says he never kissed Patti. "I cannot tell a lie," he says, "General Sherman did it." And Patti says she never would have permitted him to kiss her, never, had she known he was only governor of Missouri, but she thought at the time he was Frank James.

There are twelve manufactories of artificial teeth in the United States, which make 10,000,000 of those useful articles per annum. They are made of feldspar, kolin, and rock crystal.

"American titles of distinction," says the Judge, "are Bearon Wallstreet, Count Yourchickens, Earl Ytobed." Oh, yes, and there's Duke Comtobed, also, and Prints Aethonews.

Capt. R. M. Andrews, a farmer, 94 years of age, of Sumter county, S. C., proposes to walk from there to Boston. He will make the journey on a wager, and is confident of accomplishing the feat.

There is said to be a man now living in Wilcox county, Ga., who had thirty-six nephews in the late war, all of whom, except three, were killed in battle. Fifteen of them belonged to the same company.

The scheme of tunnelling under the Straits of Messina has met with such difficulties that it has been rejected in favor of a long ferryboat capable of carrying twenty-four railway carriages.

The canton of Glaris, Switzerland, abolished capital punishment a few years ago. The experiment has not proved satisfactory, and the Government has decided by a large majority to re-introduce it.

Alexandre Dumas has just given a dinner to the members of the committee for his father's statue, which had this original feature, that the menu was taken entirely from the novels of Dumas Pere, who was as proud of his cookery as of his tales.

A sect is said to have been discovered in Rostov, South Russia, who poison children with narcotics. It was founded by a woman who murdered her children in order to relieve them from earthly suffering and procure for them celestial happiness.

The Committee of Experts examined and passed upon, up to date, $438,850 of the Bank of Tennessee, for which amount certificates have been issued. They have also up to date, out of the amount examined, rejected as spurious, $970, and returned to the owners $905 of the old Bank of Tennessee money.

The photographers in New York have discovered a method of taking pictures without any aid from the sun. They use the electric light, and some operators are said to have become so expert at the process that better photographs are obtained in that way than by the usual means, and pictures can be taken as well at night as in the daytime.

Our Republican orators talk of making the South rich like the North. We are not sure about that. Now York is the richest of them all. She has a hundred millionaires to a hundred thousand paupers. And Joaquin Miller says the misery of those paupers is such that no man who should foretell that the fine avenues of New York city and her palatial residences will soon be obliterated in blood and fire, would risk his reputation as a prophet very seriously. Immense wealth and "smoking furnaces" in the hands of the few, are not the emblems of a happy and prosperous country.

Fannie Horton, a once celebrated actress, won her first applause in a somewhat singular manner. During her performance in a particular scene she was loudly hissed, when, advancing to the footlights, she asked: "Which do you dislike—my playing or my person?" "The playing, the playing!" was the answer from all parts of the house. "Well," she returned, "that consoles me; for my playing may be bettered, but my person I cannot alter!" The audience were so struck with the ingenuity of this retort that they immediately applauded as loudly as they had the moment before condemned her; and from that night she improved in her acting, and soon became a favorite with the public.

The Empress Dowager of China is modestly asserting herself about in the way the strong-minded members of the gentler sex have at all times and in all nations asserted themselves when in power and when an opportunity offered. She flew into a passion because Prince Kung and his Council did not talk the Frenchmen out of Tonquin, has already taken Kung's official head, and in the face of great opposition has elevated Prince Chun, her favorite, the father of the young Emperor, to Prince Kung's place. Speculation is all at sea as to what the general effects of these changes may be, but as they are made on account of the failures of a mere policy of talk and in the interest of a more vigorous opposition to the French invasion, the probability is that Prince Chun, the Empress and the thirteen-year-old Emperor are all bent on schemes that will make the Tonquin ring with a new kind of celestial music before a great while.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Democratic State Convention of Tennessee will meet in Nashville the 18th of next June.

The Tennessee Republicans will go forth to see their frail Reid shaken with the wind.

Judge Frank T. Reid, the Republican nominee for Governor of Tennessee, was a rebel soldier.

Hon. Emerson Etheridge has been kicked clean out of the republican party by Yardley.

The largest boom in this country is the Tilden boom. The next largest is the Blaine boom, but don't mention it to the little machine men in Tennessee.—Knoxville Tribune.

Maryland republicans are for Blaine.

Diphtheria and scarlet fever are epidemic in Detroit, Michigan.

The State Democratic Convention will meet in the Capitol, on the 18th of June, 1884. Let the same 1,400 Democrats come, We must win.—Nashville World.

Mrs. James, wife of the noted prisoner, Frank James, clings to her husband with that true devotion characteristic of a loving wife, and at no time is she found absent from his side during the session of the court.

The bill creating a Bureau of labor statistics has passed the lower House of Congress. The object of this bureau is to acquire useful information on the subject of labor, its relation to capital, and the means of providing the material, social, intellectual and moral prosperity of laboring men and women.

Not a single Democratic vote from any one of the following States was cast against the consideration of the Morrison bill: Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Kentucky, Massachusetts, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, West Virginia and Wisconsin. On the contrary, every Democratic Representative from these States who was present voted for taking up the bill.

The late Republican Convention at Evergreen, Ala., got into a scramble over the color-line which brought forth the following from one of the brethren in black:

"Gentlemen of the Convention, whenever you see a white man quitting his own party and coming over to join us niggers, you may know he is mighty low. When his own race won't have him, we have not got any use for him."

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of the overthrow of the temporal power as a cargo heavy enough to sink the bark of St. Peter.

The old Catholic movement in Italy has this winter received a considerable impetus by the adherence of one of the Pope's domestic prelates, Monsignor Giambattista Savarese. He has lately completed a course of conferences on the subject in Rome, held on Sundays, which were well attended by both Italians and English. He and Count Campello (formerly one of the canons of St. Peter's) together conducted the services in the Old Catholic Church, 18 Via Genova, Rome, Father Curci, who, unlike them, works for reform within the Romish pale, has come under the Papal censure, though he has as yet escaped excommunication. In his last work, "Il Vaticano Regio"—of which it is hoped that a translation may before long appear in England—he sets forth the evils accruing to the Church from the policy pursued at the Papal Court. His opinion has all the more weight as coming from one who was for fifty years an ornament of the Jesuit Order, from which he was cashiered not long ago for the liberality of his opinions and his advocacy of